Exploring and discovering the information contained in Hansard and Committee Evidence

Introduction

The features available with the online versions of the Hansard and Committee Evidence allow users to explore, discover and access information from a publication.

For example:

The Table of Contents is easily accessible at any time.

You can easily and quickly find anything said by a certain Member or anything that has been said about a particular topic.

You can subscribe to two different RSS feeds: Subscribe to a specific Member's Activity Feed to receive the content of his/her latest interventions in the Hansard and committees, or subscribe to the RSS feed for a topic you are interested in and receive the latest interventions of all those (Members, Committees Members and Witnesses) who discussed the topic in the House or committees.

Links to Facebook, Twitter and other social networking sites allow you to share points of interest.

Each intervention provides links to the Member's profile, their votes, the audio and/or video and lists the topics discussed during the intervention.

There is also a link that allows users to access an XML version of an intervention or the publication which can be re-used and re-purposed on other Web sites or in other capacities.

Mr. Speaker, that is an excellent question. That is exactly what Yukoners want. They want this done as quickly as possible. I think there is unbelievable consensus. This is what can happen when we start at the beginning, co-developing legislation, and then having the buy-in, as we have now, even with the chamber of mines. There is no reason to hold this back. I would entertain any collaboration that we could have, from all parties, to move this through as quickly as possible with the consensus of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I would tend to disagree. Although the previous Yukon government and the previous federal government thought these amendments were a good thing, they were totally against what had been suggested and agreed upon by first nations in Yukon. That really hindered the approach that was working well with YESAA and with the regulations that are now being worked on regarding timelines. I would be more than happy to get the details that the member has asked for.

Mr. Speaker, I am kind of intrigued by the presentation.

I come from a region where there is an environmental assessment and review process that is pretty complex under the James Bay and northern Quebec agreement. A lot of people have argued in the past that this process is an impediment to development in the territory.

After 40 years with that process in place, if there is one place in our country where development is going well, it is in the James Bay northern Quebec area. That is the objective of an environmental assessment process. When developers arrive in a territory and they know the rules of the game, they know the rules under legislation in environmental assessment, that is what helps development in any given territory. That is what forges partnerships with indigenous peoples.

I wonder if my friend could comment on this.
